With just over three months until it opens, Oceanology International 2016 (OI) being held at ExCeL London, UK, from 15-17 March 2016, is according to the organisers set to be a record-breaker. It has already matched the size of OI 2014 and, with hundreds of additional metres on reserve and due to be confirmed soon, the 2016 event will be the biggest OI of all time. Registration now is available online.

Obtaining the visitor badge can be arranged for free at the Oceanology International website, where all information is available.

Event director Jonathan Heastie of Reed Exhibitions mentions that over 8,000m<sup>2</sup> has been sold to 326 exhibiting companies from 32 countries. Over a hundred exhibiting companies take more space than in the earlier edition and 59 new exhibiting companies could be welcomed. Fugro, Teledyne, Keller and IXBlue are sponsors of key elements of next spring's show, which is held in partnership with The Society for Underwater Technology, and with the Hydrographic Society UK, IMarEST, IMCA, the Marine Technology Society, and the Society of Maritime Industries as endorsing organisations."

Pavillions and Demonstrations

There are Canadian, French, German, Irish, Dutch and US national group stands at OI 2016, as well as a diving pavilion.

Vessels and dockside demonstrations of equipment will once again be a popular feature. In 2014 vessel movements proved a record-breaker with 148 movements during the three days with 1198 people aboard and a record number of 13 visiting vessels. Companies that consider to participate in this year's waterborne and demonstration areas are asked to contact vessel manager Stephen Taylor.
